

Dall Energy conducts ambitious acquisition

The biomass expert expands its commitment in France

Photo: Steen Knarberg

Af Maria Berg Badstue Pedersen 3. oktober 2024 21:27

The Danish company Dall Energy has acquired the French biomass technology company Weiss France Énergie and its subsidiary Biomasse Services et Maintenance (BSM).

Læs også: Dall Energy foretager ambitiøst opkøb

- We are excited about this acquisition. Weiss is a local, leading provider of energy technology, and our technologies complement each other. Together, we will be able to deliver even better solutions to the country's district heating companies and process industry, says Dall Energy's CEO, Jens Bentzen, in a press release.

French demand in volume

In recent years, Dall Energy has seen increasing demand from French municipalities and businesses, which has meant tremendous growth in the country. The company has delivered several plants to French utility companies and a paper mill. Most recently, Dall Energy has entered into an agreement for district heating for 40,000 French households.

This has led to an ambition to become a leading player in biomass process technology in France.

- France is a primary market for us, and Weiss' extensive network and partners will help us build closer relationships in the country. Initially as separate entities - but we have planned a post-merger integration process this fall, so we can take advantage of the synergies as soon as possible, says Jens Bentzen.

Læs også: Dall Energy henter ny salgsdirektør hos Nature Energy

Both Dall Energy and Weiss specialize in the development of biomass technologies and solutions, which include dry biomass resources, wet biomass, and raw materials with high contents of pollutants. They also service facilities directly or through partnerships.

Going forward, Dall Energy and Weiss will work closely together – also with the main investor, Eiffel IG – first in France, but likely soon across the entire EU.

Dall Energy does not wish to disclose the purchase amount.

Facts and key figures

- BSM and Weiss have both been acquired by Dall Energy ApS from Groupe Roullier.
- Together, the companies have approximately 100 employees distributed across France and Denmark.
- Weiss and BSM will continue their operations from their respective offices in France.
- During 2024, Weiss will assist Dall Energy in establishing a "Dall Energy France" company
- Dall Energy France will be the entity from which local Dall Energy projects will be implemented.
- Strategic plans to promote synergies will be launched during the fall of 2024.
- Eiffel IG is a main investment partner and has invested through its fund: Eiffel Essentiel.